Expression of vascular endothelial growth factor and its receptor Flt-1 in relation to laryngeal squamous cell carcinoma. The vascular endothelial growth factor (VEGF) plays an important role in angiogenesis and lymphangiogenesis. The vascular endothelial growth factor and its receptor Flt-1 are thought to be important in vascular neovascularization in many human malignancies, especially in malignant melanoma. We investigated the expression of vascular endothelial growth factor and Flt-1 in laryngeal squamous cell carcinoma. We studied the immunohistochemical expression of VEGF and Flt-1 in laryngeal squamous cell carcinoma. Vascular endothelial growth factor and Flt-1 protein and mRNA were detected immunohistochemically and semiquantitatively scored. Vascular endothelial growth factor expression was found in 79% of laryngeal squamous cell carcinomas (12 cases weakly positive, seven moderately positive and 21 strongly positive) but was not detected in healthy mucosa. Flt-1 expression was demonstrated in 91% of laryngeal squamous cell carcinomas (four cases weakly positive, 13 moderately positive and 29 strongly positive). Vascular endothelial growth factor expression was correlated with that of Flt-1 ( $p=0.031$ ). In addition, strong expression of VEGF and/or Flt-1 was found in the submucosal or lymph nodal extension. Vascular endothelial growth factor and Flt-1 play an important role in neovascularization in laryngeal squamous cell carcinoma.

Polymorphism of apolipoprotein E in Alzheimer disease. As genetic factors are undoubtedly of importance to the development of Alzheimer disease (AD), attention has been focused on loci which contribute to AD through this mode of genetic transmission. Over the past several years, a particular polymorphism of the apolipoprotein E gene (apo E), epsilon 2/epsilon 3/epsilon 4, has been associated with a highly increased risk of developing AD in those who are epsilon 3/epsilon 4 heterozygotes (odds
