Instead of the 100 yard dash, you run as long as you want to, but we'll wrap it up when you get to the 50 yard line," Brian Saban, head coach for the University of Alabama football team, told his players. As students at a predominantly black high school in Texas, the players were shocked. But Saban's "100 yard dash" has become a rite of passage for the football teams in the country's most prominent public universities. In the last year, a growing number of colleges have adopted new policies for a game in which the final score and position seem more important than the results. One Wisconsin school allowed the offensive team to score at will, and a few universities have changed the outcome of a tie game, meaning that the team that scored first won. Enrollment at public universities has fallen for the past decade, with a large portion of the decline occurring in the last few years. The number of students entering public universities is now half of what it was in 1990, according to the government. Public universities have taken on more money from property taxes and private donors, but universities that recruit less students are increasingly putting pressure on the education department to maintain enrollment. Colleges that have resisted signing on to the A.P. policy say they run the risk of jeopardizing the quality of their academic programs and can face lawsuits from players.Effect of dietary sodium

TheÂ .The problem of alkali metal addition to CO2 and other hydrocarbon substrates is well known in the field of coal liquefaction and other hydrocarbon conversion. Processes are known which use alkali metal amides as activators for the catalytic conversion of hydrocarbons to a variety of products, including, among others, gasoline and motor fuels, chemicals and olefins. Alkali metal amides are superior to alkali metal alkoxides in these processes due to their low ignition temperatures. It is known that alkali metal amides are most easily formed from alkali metal alkoxides and ammonia in the presence of a solvent. The most commonly used solvent is water and the most commercially common amides are lithium and sodium amides. It is also known that sodium amides and lithium amides are stable at temperatures of about 400.degree. C. when catalytically effective. It is also known that catalytic amide formation has heretofore been carried out at temperatures in the range of about 250.degree. C. to about 400.degree. C. With a temperature of 250.degree. C. the reaction is not complete at a reaction time of greater than about 10 minutes and with a temperature of 400.degree. C. the amides decompose at a reaction rate which is too high for a commercially useful catalytic conversion. Attempts to lower the reaction temperature to about 200.degree. C. have resulted in a drop 3e33713323
