We are indebted to the many readers of the eleventh edition for their feedback and constructive comments, many of which have influenced the current revision. We are indebted to the many readers of the eleventh edition for their feedback and constructive comments, many of which have influenced the current revision. We have devoted considerable effort to make this new edition comprehensive, accurate, and user-friendly. The anatomy and physiology modules have been reviewed and have been organized according to the logical progression of the subject matter. Practically, the integration of physiology into the larger picture of human biology and pathology makes it possible to relate the individual role of the internal organs in the living body to their function in health and disease. We emphasize the underlying principles and underlying anatomy and use the principles to illuminate the intricacies of the body systems. Formal studies of anatomy and physiology are grounded in the unity of design and function of the living body. As a consequence the two aspects have been integrated. The organization of the book into modules follows the logical progression of the subject matter. The entire content of each module has been painstakingly reviewed by qualified and specialized instructors. We acknowledge the senior instructors of post-graduate programs and the educators who have supervised the teaching of anatomy and physiology at the university level. We also recognize the support we receive from our donors who are actively engaged in a lifelong pursuit of continuous improvement of the book. At present we are involved in two major revision projects. The first involves the arrangement of the books into groups that reflect the modular organization of the book. The second, or more ambitious, project is the moving of the physical form of the book closer to the modular organization. This is a daunting task but we are confident that our commitment to long-term successful revisions will pay off in the eleventh edition. This new edition represents the culmination of many years of work. We thank and appreciate the many.
