Photoshop is a drawing program, not a photo editing program. When you work with photo retouching on a computer, you create a copy of the photo and do your edits on the duplicate image. If you alter the original photo, the changes will not be reflected in the duplicate. Photoshop stores the original image. Photoshop includes many features you may need to perform photo retouching, but you don't need them all. Photoshop includes all the features you need for basic photo retouching. Chapter 6 introduces you to the tools you need for photo retouching. * * * # Practicing with photo retouching After this lesson, you will understand how to work with a photo to create an improved version. 1. **Open a new document on your computer in the** **Photoshop Elements Organizer**. 2. **Choose Edit** ⇒ **Edit In Camera Raw**. The Camera Raw window opens. The Camera Raw window is the same as the main editing window, but it is arranged with icons at the bottom of the window. You use it to work with raw image files as well as JPEG, TIFF, GIF, and PNG files. 3. **Click the Select tab at the top of the window (see** **Figure** **3-4** **, left) to access the selection tools.** The next image shows the selection tools. The Move tool (M) has similar functionality as the Select tool (S), and it does not affect layers as the Select tool does. 4. **Click anywhere inside the photo until the crosshairs appear, and then click-drag a selection around the fire hydrant (see** **Figure** **3-4** **, right).** The image now looks like the one in Figure 3-5. You see the green mask where the burned image is, and you can also see the unedited version.

ization of the free energy, and any subsequent efforts to investigate the potential function  $F_S$  are useless. Note that we are interested in the case where  $F_S$  is the negation of the energy. This is nothing but an energy neutral free energy [Norman\_2002]. The similarities between our concept and free energy functionals defined in the literature can be seen as follows. In this paper, the definition of the free energy function is expanded to a function of the cluster size distribution  $Q_n$  as  $F = \sum_{n=1}^{\infty} p_n \ln Q_n$ , as in Eq. (FreeEnergy). If we were to further extend the definition to  $F = \sum_{n=1}^{\infty} Q_n \ln Q_n$ , the function  $F_S$  resembles the entropy defined in Ref. [Orsay\_2017]. If the summation is limited from  $n=N$  to  $n=N+1$  in Eq. (FreeEnergy), the free energy function has similarities with the excess free energy of the inhomogeneous cluster-size model [Orsay\_2017; Orsay\_2018; Frenkel\_2002]. If the size distribution is written in the extended form  $Q_{N+n}$ , the free energy function resembles a function defined in the inhomogeneous cluster-size model [Voter\_2005; Orsay\_2017]. In summary, we propose a new way of defining the free energy functional in terms of cluster sizes, which will hopefully help us to better understand the physical properties of the system. This should also help to develop new methods to calculate the properties of supercooled liquids. Photoperiod-induced changes in the reproductive systems of male broilers: effects on follicle cell number and morphology, and expression of Vitellogenin genes. When birds are exposed to long photoperiods (>21 h), the gonadal tissue increases in size and secrete spermatogonia, which differentiate into spermatogonia. The primary purpose of this study was to determine whether the photoperiod can also regulate follicle cell differentiation in broilers. Male broilers were exposed to short (6 h) or long (24 h) photoperiods. At the end of the short photoperiod, the photoperiodic response was observed to cease. The 24 h photoperiod produced a large increase in testis size (14% of body weight) and increases in both gonadal volume and follicle cell number. The thickening of the granular layer (which is correlated to the most intensive Vitellogenin synthesis) was observed in the outer layer of the follicular epithelium. Vitellogenin expression was detected in the follicle cells of the outer granular layer by in situ hybridization. The Vitellogenin mRNA was exclusively expressed in the granular layer cells in the 24 h long photoperiod. However, Vitellogenin and Vitellogenin mRNA expression in the granular layer of the 6 h photoperiod were extremely low. THURSDAY, May 4, 2018 -- People with high blood pressure and prehypertension are at a higher risk for heart disease and stroke, and prehypertension is especially risky in patients with other risk factors for vascular disease, a new study from the American Heart Association concludes. The study will be published in the May issue of The New England Journal of Medicine. "This study is the largest and most robust clinical trial ever to show that lowering blood pressure is important and can be lifesaving for people with prehypertension," said lead author Dr. Brian Boyle, a researcher at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center and the lead author of the study. "So people with prehypertension, whether they are at higher risk for heart disease or stroke, should speak with their doctor about getting on medications to lower their blood pressure." The study, called the Reduction of Cardiovascular Events with Olmesartan and Other Medications (ORIENT), compared 1,763 patients at high risk of cardiovascular disease to 2,270 patients at
