* Windows : Click the Photoshop icon at the left end of the taskbar and from the drop-down menu choose Applications ⇒ Photoshop. If you are installing Photoshop for the first time, choose the Photoshop CS6 application from this same drop-down menu. Figure 11-1. When you open the Photoshop application window, you're greeted with lots of controls that you can use to manipulate images. The layers palette can be used to create, delete, or modify multiple layers at once. # Personal preferences You can use Photoshop Elements and Photoshop for similar purposes. If you feel comfortable with Elements, you'll find it very easy to use it for basic photo editing—but there are some good reasons to learn Photoshop (and one bonus, even though it's not a _must_). The biggest reason is that you can go very far with elements, but you can't go very far with Photoshop without spending serious time learning it. Also, Photoshop has more powerful features than Elements, especially when it comes to layers. The other big reason is that the programs are very different. Photoshop is a workhorse that goes way beyond image editing, which is Elements' only purpose. ## Adjustment Layers The most powerful tool in Photoshop is the adjustment layer. It's used to simulate a change in exposure, color balance, or toning without having to change the underlying photo's pixels (which would change the photo's appearance). Adjustment layers have two very important advantages over normal layers. The first is that they behave as any other layers in the way that you can move them, resize them, and so on, and you can also add new adjustment layers, duplicating existing ones. The second is that you can apply multiple adjustment layers to an image. The easiest way to create an adjustment layer is to drag a regular layer below an adjustment layer and then click OK. Now you have two layers: one that contains the original pixels and another that contains the adjustment you made. You can duplicate the adjustment layer, or move or resize it. Figure 11-2") shows an example.

The specific activity of the beta-hydroxylase and the 7- and 3 beta-hydroxylase of cholesterol were determined in plasma and in the perfused hepatic cells of ovariectomized and ovariectomized-estradiol-17 beta-treated female Rhesus monkeys during spontaneous or induced luteinization. This dual phase study of steroid metabolism in the white-blooded Rhesus monkey provided evidence that estradiol-17 beta stimulated both the 7- and 3 beta-hydroxylases, and that these genes are controlled by an ovarian steroid inducers.Let's be honest, Americans are tired of the anti-American whining and complaining about how horrible we are, how evil we are, how bad we are, how dishonest we are, how evil the politicians are, and how the media is a total pile of crap. But most Americans cannot and do not rise above it, because we are just too busy doing the real work that allows for the affluence that allow us to complain about the political storm in Washington. It is only because we do the work of building this country every day that we see through the media and political storm and know that no one is really looking into the White House. We have no idea if they are making decisions from their hearts or from their wallets. We have no idea if they are really evil or just crooked. And that is one of the biggest things stopping America going back to what we were in the 1950's. No one is looking into the White House, because people have decided that once a politician is in office he or she is just one of us. Well, not quite. They are not just one of
